

The Way it Works
© September 12, 2009
by Michael Keehn
mhkeehn@gmail.com

How the problems we Americans face come into being is often not visible to us. The 'main stream 'misleadia' news papers and periodicals will report the problem, but go out of their way not to identify how we got into the problem since the problem was most likely engineered through policies of the country's leadership. But the entrapment works the same in other countries as it does in America. Let's examine Cochabamba, Bolivia, for example.

When a country needs improvements it applies to the International Monetary Fund (IMF) for a loan. While the IMF may well approve the loan, there are stipulations that come with the loan. In this case the stipulations required Bolivia to sell off all remaining public enterprises, including national oil refineries and Cochabamba's local water agency. In September 1998, the IMF approves a 138-million dollar loan to Bolivia.

A year later, in September 1999, Bolivia turns over the municipal water system of Cochabamba to a private corporation, Aguas del Tunari. Negotiations on this matter were private and kept secret from the public (the people who suffer the consequences of such negotiations). Aguas del Tunari is a consortium of private investors. Listed on their website are two share holders, American engineering firm Bechtel Group, Inc., and United Utilities Plc, a company evidently based in England. In effect, two companies located in western governments now hold control over Cochabamba's water system.

In October 1999, Aguas del Tunari announces that it has acquired 40-year concession rights to provide water and sanitation services to Cochabamba. International Water, Ltd., the Bechtel subsidiary and major share holder of Agua del Tunari, also announces to the residents of Cochabamba that water delivery and sewerage fees will increase by at least 93% in the first five years of privatization. The privatization of water had gone to such an extreme that the people of Cochabamba were not allowed to collect the rain water for their use.

Of course the destitute Bolivian people couldn't begin to pay the increases. All of this led to a water revolt by the people of Cochabamba in which they took back their water system. This led to law suits filed by Bechtel through its subsidiary.

So here we have the leadership of Bolivia selling off public oil refineries, sewerage and water systems for a 138-million dollar loan. Personally, I cannot visualize selling just one oil refinery for 138-million. On the surface it would appear that Bolivia's leadership was either bought or threatened, which may, or may not be the case. But then, what other motivations are there? And this is how countries around the world are enslaved through the IMF. DEBT, becomes the enslaving tool of the moneyed elite.

Which brings us back to America. From the Banking Relief Act of March 9, 1933, we read:

"The actions, regulations, rules, licenses, orders and proclamations heretofore or hereafter taken, promulgated, made, or issued by the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury since March 4, 1933 pursuant to the authority conferred by subdivision (b) of section 5 of the Act of October 6, 1917, as amended, are hereby approved and confirmed.”

Do you notice anything unusual about this text? Take a moment and study it carefully and see if you can detect any unusual reference.

You will notice that they go out of their way to identify the President, as the President of the United States, but then identify the Treasury Secretary as only that, and not the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. This is because this reference is not to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, it is a reference to the Secretary of Treasury of the International Monetary Fund. But the average reader will probably assume that the Treasury Secretary referenced is of the United States, exactly as the deceivers wish, and YES, as you can see in the language above, UNELECTED PEOPLE HAVE PRESIDENTIAL POWERS IN OUR COUNTRY. And we wonder why our country is in trouble. And YES, such deceptions are why the average person is ignorant of the law.

What takes place is that engineers, skilled workers, and suppliers for such projects as the Cochabamba water system are all located in western governments, and it is these western companies who actually receive the 138-million dollars. The people of Bolivia, or whatever third world country you would like to name, do not get the benefit (economic stimulus) of the money lent through jobs, products and services, only the responsibility of paying it back. The project then becomes propaganda fed to the American people... see what we're doing for the people of the world... blah, blah, blah.

The United States government, borrows the money needed to operate the country in the current fiscal year from the Federal Reserve Bank. This borrowing includes the interest payment on the already outstanding national debt.

And do not deceive yourself, Americans do not owe this debt to themselves, they owe it to the privately owned Federal Reserve Bank, the private creditors of the United States. The United States government never pays on the principle of the loan (the national debt). Consequently, the loan is continually growing. And like in all countries who fail to pay their creditors, it will ultimately destroy our country and bring it to heel under the directives of the creditors as is always the case when the bill isn't paid. We could well end up not being allowed to collect rain water or grow our own vegetables from legacy seeds (non-hybrid).

The military of the United States is no longer the military of the united States of America, it is the military of the international creditors who buy the elections, control our elected officials and determine the law and policies of the United States.

And this military of the international creditor elite will most likely be used to subdue the American people after disarming them, or so they hope. We have yet to see how this aspect plays out... to a great degree it depends on how stupid and apathetic we elect to be. But it is a good indication why our leadership has entered into agreements with Canada and other countries to allow their military into the United States upon a declared emergency (and we wonder how the New World Order / One World Government will take effect). I firmly believe that the leadership of America is becoming concerned that we the people are beginning to wake up to what's going on. And I would agree, little by little, more and more people are actually beginning to think and realize that everything is not wonderful here in La-La Land.

Is it time for the wise to give consideration to preparation? Maybe, only time will tell.